

Report on Attending BACCN Conference - Critical Care across the World: Breaking Down Barriers

As in 2020 BACCN Conference took place virtually on 13th and 14th September and I was lucky enough to receive a BACCN grant to attend the event.

There were so many sessions and posters of interest – too many to write about. For me the most poignant session was Eamonn Sullivan reflecting on his leadership journey during the past 18 months. Personally I find leadership to be an overused term in the current NHS but this presentation really resonated with me about what leadership could actually look like. Listening to Eamonn's journey brought back those difficult feelings that I experience during the beginning of the covid-19 pandemic in Spring 2020. Although difficult to listen to it was useful to go back to those feelings and realise how far we had come.
